USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE.
—Keep a blank book with a thick cover in the kitchen, and copy any bits of information that may be likely to be of use sometime. Be sure and write in a large, clear hand.
—It has been found from analysis that ten tons of small sugar beets, weighing one and one-third pounds each, contained as much solid matter as thirteen tons of beets weighing five and one-half pounds each.
—Tomato Soy.—One peck of ripe tomatoes, one quart of vinegar, three and a half pounds of sugar, and one ounce of whole cloves. Put all over the fire together, and let them stew slowly until they become a thick mass, very rich and dark.
—Cottage Pudding.—One cup of sugar, one tablespoonful butter, two eggs, one cup sweet milk, three cups flour, half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream-tariff sifted with the flour, a pinch of salt. Bake in a buttered mold. Eat hot, cut in slices, with a liquid sauce.
—Nice Fried Liver.—Cut into small strips, put on a platter, pour over boiling water and immediately pour it off. Place a frying-pan on the stove with some beef dripping in it; dredge the liver with cracker dust, season with pepper and salt and put into the pan. Cover and fry slowly until the pieces are well browned. A little chopped onion cooked with the liver is very nice for those who like the flavor.
—A recipe for New England baked beans: Boil the beans (the small pea-bean is the best) in plenty of water and put them in an earthen pot, with cover, and bake slowly for two hours or more, in water enough to keep them well-soaked. Most people in New England add from one to four tablespoonfuls of molasses, according to their taste. This gives them a rich brownish shade, and a better taste. Put in pork or not, and in quantity to suit.
—A writer in the Practical Farmer gives the results of experience in saving flower seeds. No general rule can be laid down, each sort requiring special treatment. Pansy seeds must be saved while they are quite green, as the pods burst as soon as they turn yellow, throwing the seed several feet. Plants of phlox and peulip when a fair amount of the seed is ripe, and spread on large sheets in a warm garret. On a small scale handpicking may do. Petunias and portulaca are treated in the same way, except that the portulaca plants are cut off, and they grow up again for another crop. Verbenas must be hand-picked twice a week for several weeks.
—The New York Sun says: "Heaves or broken wind in horses is not readily cured, but the distress of the animal may be alleviated by giving proper care and attention to his food. Give no musty hay, avoiding all kinds containing clover of any species. Turn out the horse in summer to pasture, and in winter feed well-washed root fodder and, or cornstalks well moistened. If hay is fed let it be in small quantities, and at night only, and then sprinkled with water when put in the manger. Also avoid driving soon after feeding. Nerve tonics are also useful, and the best of these is arsenic, given in five-grain doses daily for a month or more, but usually three or four weeks will be sufficient."
—Fowls in Orchards.—Last fall the editor of the Poultry World visited an orchard in which fowls were kept, the owner of which told him that before the fowls were confined in the trees made little or no growth and only a corresponding amount of fruit was obtained. But what a change was evident now! The grass was kept down, the weeds killed, and the trees presented an appearance of thrift, which the most enthusiastic horticulturist could not but admire and envy. The growth of the trees was most vigorous, and the foliage most luxuriant; the fruit was abundant, of large size, and free from worms and other imperfections. The excellence was accounted for by the proprietor, who remarked that the hens ate all the worms and curculion in the orchard, even to the "canker worm." He found less trouble with their roosting in trees than he expected, and a picket fence six feet high kept them within bounds. His orchard was divided into three sections, and the fowls were changed from one to another as the condition of the fowls or the orchard sections seem to require.

A Heartless Swindle of an Aged Couple.
The lumbermen and bark peddlers of the Pocono region, in the northern part of Monroe County, Pa., are on the lookout for a slim, dark-complexioned man, with a dark mustache and wearing a striped coat and blue overalls. If he is found they declare that he will be fortunate if he lives to see the inside of the penitentiary.
Barnett Woolbert is an industrious aged farmer, who lives with his wife, who is also advanced in years, near Bossardville. His daughter, Henrietta, works at Stauffer's Hotel, in Pocono Township. A son, George, has been working in the woods at Bear Creek, near White Haven. A few days ago the person described above, whose name is unknown, appeared at Stauffer's Hotel, and inquired for Henrietta Woolbert. She answered his call.
"I've got bad news for you," he said. "Your brother George was killed yesterday. He was struck on the back of the head by a rock flying from a blast. The sister was almost crazed by his story. She begged him to go at once and inform her parents. He said he had been sent down for that purpose, but his money had given out. Miss Woolbert gave him some money. He exhibited her the measurement for the young man's grave, which had been taken, he said, in order that everything might be got in readiness by the time the remains arrived home. The stranger left the hotel, but stayed that night in the neighborhood. The next day he went to old Mr. Woolbert's. Mr. Woolbert was absent in Bossardville. The stranger told Mrs. Woolbert the same story he had told her daughter. She had been expecting the son home on a visit in a day or two. The news overcame her, and she fainted. When she came to the stranger told her that he had come on ahead of the remains in order that arrangements might be made for the funeral. While he was talking Mr. Woolbert came home. His wife burst into tears, and falling into his arms, gave him the terrible message she had received, with the agonizing cry: "George is dead, father! George is dead!"
"Yes, the poor boy's dead," said the stranger, and he repeated to the old farmer the story in detail. He gave the old couple the measurement for the grave, and told them that the remains of their son would arrive at Forks Station, on the Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad, on the down train that day. He said he would engage a hearse to take to meet the train if they would direct him where to find one. Anthony Miller, a neighbor, was called, and he went with the stranger to Tannersville and arranged to have a hearse meet the train at Forks. The man obtained money from Miller as well as from the couple, having informed them that his valise with all his own money was at Pocono Switch. He then offered to inform any other relatives of Mr. Woolbert on his way to the Switch, if there were any. He was asked to call at the house of another sister of George's, and tell her. He went away, saying that he would be at Forks when the remains arrived, to render any aid he could.
He called at the other sister's house, where another sorrowful scene was enacted, and where he obtained more money by saying that there would be a man with the remains who had a watch belonging to George, upon which something had to be paid to have it delivered to the friends of the deceased man. He then went toward Pocono Switch. Meanwhile, a number of the neighbors of the Woolberts took the measurement for the grave and had one dug. A minister was engaged to preach the funeral sermon. The hearse and some friends of the family were at the depot when the train arrived. There was no corpse in it, and none of the train officers knew of any that was to be sent. The sisters of the dead young man had each gone to the homestead.
The stranger was not at the depot as he had agreed to be, and then for the first time some of the neighbors began to entertain a suspicion. A telegram was sent to White Haven, asking for particulars of the death of George Woolbert. Word was received in reply that nobody could be found in the vicinity of Bear Creek who had heard of his death. Subsequently the news was sent that George Woolbert was alive and at work as usual. When this was received at Forks Station a large number of friends and neighbors of the Woolberts had gathered at the farm to be present during the funeral. They knew nothing of what was transpiring at Forks. When Anthony Miller drove up to the house with the news that George was not dead, the family were beside themselves with joy. The indignation against the man who had been guilty of perpetrating so ghastly a fraud to obtain a trifling amount of money was so intense that he would have been hanged to the nearest tree if he could have been found. Men started in search of him but he had escaped.—Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Ants in Nebraska.
The ant family is an interesting species. They are here full sized, both black and red, and are numerous as what we call army ants. They scatter over these prairies by the quintillions. They are black, about an eighth of an inch long, and are fierce, stern, and sullen, with the right characteristics for soldiers. Sometimes they march in columns of great length, and pay no attention to you whatever. If you lay an obstruction in their way, they do just as a railroad company would do under similar circumstances—they remove it if they can; if not, they bridge it over. If this is not practicable, they lay the track around. Once I put a layer of powdered alum across their army. Alum they shun like poison. A number carried earth and quickly bridged it over. I then put a layer of alum on their bridge. That sent them around it. They are a hunting tribe, and will kill and eat whatever comes in their way. I have frequently watched the conflict between a number of these and a large red ant nearly an inch long. The little fellows seize the giant by the legs, and, despite his struggles, hold on. The giant picks up all the assailants he can reach and clings them in two, but it avails him little, for there are always others to take hold, and though the struggle may last for hours, he is sure to be worried to death, as escape is impossible. A small number take their victim in hand at a time, just enough to easily handle him, and the others go about their business as unconcerned as though they had been accustomed to such battles from infancy. When the victory is won they all join in and have a feast. In this way they kill worms, flies, grasshoppers, and dragon flies. The victors are sometimes larger than a hundred ants. Woe to any of these when once the little bull dog ant has fastened his fangs on their legs. It is something pathetic to witness the fearful struggle for life and the terrible death throes of even a little insect in the wilderness.—Cor. N. Y. Sun.

DR. PRICE'S REPUTATION!
Has been acquired by candid, honest dealing and years of successful practice. My practice, not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with years of experience and evidence to sustain it. It does not tear down, make sick to make well; no harsh treatment, no trifling, no flattery. We know the cause and the remedy needed; no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of Chronic Diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Cautions in our opinions, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything or cure everybody, but do lay claim to reason and common sense. We invite the sick, no matter what ailment, to call and investigate before they abandon hope, make interruptions and decide for yourself; it will cost nothing as consultation is free. Visits made regularly.
